ABOUT THE SEMINAR

Political parties are indispensable for the working of modern democratic governments. The importance of Political parties lies in the fact that democracies cannot function without the existence of political parties.

The rapid rise in the effective number of parties, changes in the relative strength of the national and regional parties and the political equations between them, the inability of any one party to control the parliament, and the presence of different parties and different patterns of party competition in states have impacted the course of India's democratization and governance.

To analyse the recent changes in political system and the rise of regional political parties, Department of Political Science, decided to host a two-day National Seminar on 27th & 28th November, 2019 on the topic "Political Parties and Indian Democracy: Current Scenario of Regional Political Parties"

OBJECTIVES OF THE SEMINAR

The objective of the seminar is to create awareness and to analyse various aspects of Indian Democracy and changing scenario of National and regional political parties and to search for strategies for effective implementation of government policies, programs and democratic principles in India.

The above objectives are sought to be achieved by having panel deliberations of eminent persons in the field and discussions followed by paper presentations.
