(57) Abstract :

MACHINE LEARNING BASED CONSTRUCTION MATERIALS REQUIREMENT PREDICTION BY CALCULATING BUILD UP AREA ABSTRACT OF THE INVENTION Natural and Synthetic are the two types of raw materials used in building constructions. Building materials account for up to 60% of the total construction cost, as we all know. Understanding and analyzing the qualitative criteria of the materials is crucial when building a house. To get the greatest result, it's crucial to have a clear concept of how to estimate the price and quantity components of the materials. The amount of materials needed for building is determined by the Build-up Area. The Machine Learning (ML) system is applied to find the amount of these raw materials required to construct house for the given build up area. The ML system starts its prediction by collecting total build up area from the user. The most commonly used construction materials which affects the major part of budget in construction cost are Cement, Sand, TMT bars, Bricks and Other aggregate Materials. The machine learning based algorithm is already trained for the sample square feet by feeding percentage rate of all major construction materials required, say for example 100 square feet. By adopting this machine learning based system, construction material requirement is estimated accurately for the given build up area so that user will be able to forecast the amount of aggregate material and the total budget required to build a house which in turn allows us to complete the project within stipulated financial support.
